Surry County Named One of the 100 Best Communities for Young People
by America's Promise Alliance and ING U.S.

Annual Competition Recognizes Communities that Prioritize Youth Education and Well-Being

September 7, 2012

Surry, VA—Surry County today was named one of America's Promise Alliance's 100 Best Communities for Young People presented by ING. The national award was given to Surry County to recognize its outstanding and innovative work in addressing the high school dropout crisis and for its programs and services that make it an outstanding place for youth to live, learn and grow.

Surry County, a third-time 100 Best winner, was again honored for its focus on collaboration in youth programming and funding. The Surry County Office on Youth coordinates the Comprehensive Service Act for At-Risk Youth Program through the combined efforts of the Community Policy Management and Family Assessment Planning Teams. Services are provided to youth with disabilities, behavior problems, and those who are involved with the juvenile justice system. The program aims to connect affected young people with an intensive treatment program to foster positive development and a stable family life. The Office on Youth has also established partnerships with nearly 80 local agencies, businesses, and regional and state entities to provide youth services, including activities to encourage academic success, work and college readiness, and prevent teen pregnancy, juvenile crime and drug use. Youth in Surry County are afforded community service opportunities through the Youth Council, CAANDUU Coalition, P.O.W.E.R and 4-H programs, faith-based organizations, and through the various school programs such as the Technology Student Association, Future Business Leaders of America, Honor Societies, and Student Government Associations.

"Being named one of America's Promise Alliance's 100 Best is significant and meaningful to the entire community," said the Honorable Judy Lyttle, Surry County Board of Supervisor Chairperson. "So many dedicated people and programs contributed to this win and it further reinforces our belief that a focus on youth pays dividends to the entire community."

"As young people across the country go back to school, it is especially timely to recognize communities like Surry County that have come together to make supporting young people a top priority and that are committed to helping young Americans reach their full potential,” said John Gomperts, America’s Promise Alliance president and CEO. “The 100 Best winners are doing outstanding work delivering the Five Promises that create the conditions for all young people to have the best chance for success. We hope the example set by these communities provides inspiration for others to take action.”

At noon EST on Sept. 12, Gomperts will join America’s Promise Alliance Chair Alma Powell and ING Foundation President Rhonda Mims at the Newseum in Washington, D.C., to officially announce the 100 winning communities during a live webcast.

“The increase we have seen in graduation rates over the past few years is due, in large part, to the hard work communities such as Surry County have done to make sure their youth have access to an outstanding education and support services,” said Rhonda Mims, president of the ING Foundation and head of the ING U.S. Office of Corporate Responsibility. “It is also important for ING to partner with organizations such as America’s Promise Alliance so we can share these best practices and play a role in improving student achievement and the nation’s economy.”

Surry County will receive a $2,500 grant, signage identifying the community as one of the nation’s 100 Best Communities for Young People, and access to America’s Promise Alliance’s community development resources.

The 100 Best competition is part of the Grad Nation campaign, a large and growing movement of dedicated individuals, organizations and communities working together to end the dropout crisis. The goal of Grad Nation is to raise the national high school graduation rate to 90 percent by 2020, with no school graduating fewer than 80 percent of its students on time.

All communities entering the 100 Best competition completed a rigorous application where they provided details on how their existing programs and initiatives help deliver the Five Promises—resources identified by America’s Promise as being critical to the development of healthy, successful children: caring adults; safe places; a healthy start; effective education; and opportunities to help others. Applicants also were asked to describe how different sectors of their community work together to help children and families overcome challenges. Most importantly, communities were judged on the strength and innovation of their efforts and programs to help young people graduate from high school prepared for college and the 21st century workforce.

In its sixth year, the competition experienced its greatest interest to date with nominations from more than 320 communities representing all 50 states, Washington, D.C., the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. Winners were chosen by a distinguished panel of judges that included 2012 National Teacher of the Year Rebecca Mieliwoki, 2012 National Superintendent of the Year Heath Morrison, National Urban League President Marc Morial, and GLSEN Executive Director Eliza Byard.

Two youth representatives also were named as selection panelists. These include Austin Bargmann, 15, from Brighton, Colo., a two-time 100 Best winner, and Ashley Levanduski, 17, from Paso Robles, Calif., who serves as a volunteer coach with an America’s Promise partner organization, The First Tee, an international youth organization that introduces golf and its inherent values to young people.
